Q: Why is my database being replicated by SQL Server Mirroring? We are using a SQL Server mirroring configuration to replicate my database to a different server (this is for testing purposes - there is no need for data loss in production). However, I'm finding that the database is being replicated to the different server. There are no SQL Server logins, SQL Server Agent jobs, SQL Server Jobs, etc. that I can see that would be linked to a SQL Server login on the target server. This is particularly odd because I was under the impression that the logins used for replication purposes would be invisible on the target server. Is there a reason why I would have two logins for my database in the event that I am using this mirroring configuration? Thanks

A: A mirror works by replicating the logins to the target server as well as the logins. If you log into the target with the same user name as the original then your logins will be replicated. The odds of anyone other than Democrats being the nominee to take on Hillary Clinton in the general election are extraordinarily long. Nowhere has that been more apparent than in recent weeks, when Donald Trump has secured a string of new endorsements - including a high-profile Hollywood actor, a religious leader and a major university. The intense support for the GOP nominee in the entertainment industry is particularly noteworthy, given that it's a place where a certain type of Republican is often anathema. But while celebrities from Rob Lowe to Candice Bergen to Sean "D
