A mild-mannered, neatly groomed man spoke about a "new beginning," the "U.N. Family." Behind him, a hellish whirlwind of corpses. The fires of hell, actually: a media campaign to persuade Americans to give their hard-earned money to a group of strange cultists, a self-proclaimed "U.N. Family," who have taken over an abandoned Holiday Inn in Las Vegas. The group, according to Tom Stevens' March 21 article in the Washington Post, exists only on a "lonely, second-tier Web site" and has no mailing address, phone number, or headquarters. Most of its members are squatters. Stevens says they are no more violent than, for example, activists fighting pollution or the poor who live in substandard housing. But on the Pacific coast of California they appear to be building a kind of basement compound with no apparent plan for escape. And their bibles, the Constitution and the Bible, have been translated into dozens of languages so the members can go around the world preaching their gospel. Everyone in the U.N. Family is "really not crazy," says Stevens, who reports that people who run off on such groups can have bad reasons for doing so. "It could be that they get sidetracked," he says. "It could be that they get scared. Or they just want to escape their own life and get involved in something else that's really interesting to them." The police caught the group's leader, Bill Bunkley, at a grocery store in the sleepy town of Brawley, California. His girlfriend helped the police locate the others. She turned out to be a killer and confessed to the murder of her boyfriend, who was a former member of the U.N. Family who had left the group. She was given a life sentence. The murder of B

Lest they imagine that the world is a lawless place, the staff at Somerset Middle School has taken to secretly filming them, recording the children's thoughts and reactions and then sharing them with their parents. The project is part of the school's Respect program. "We thought the best way to help them to learn about respectful relationships with others was to have them reflect on what they want to do if their parents and their friends are not present," headmaster Graham Ashdown said. The final result is a DVD compilation of the children's views on gun control, drugs and alcohol, acceptable standards of dress and behaviour, and hard drugs. The school started the project last year, and it has enjoyed a positive response from parents, who have had their children's opinions posted on the school's website. But the staff wanted to change things up a bit, and this year they have taken to filming the students at home and at school, although they are not going to show the footage to their children. Mr Ashdown said the project had been successful. "There has been some very good feedback, with a number of parents approving of the project, and they would be keen to see more projects like this in future," he said. "This kind of activity can help

What's New In MotionMap?

Modify objects in the game The developer is planning to add support for other video file formats like MOV, MP4 and AVI, since it works well with JPG, JPEG, PNG and BMP. Although I would have liked the option to customize the colors, I would recommend the app. However, if you are looking for a new and promising tool that can be an effective alternative to redo your video analysis job, then it's worth trying out this software. One of the greatest technological advancements over the last few years has been the emergence of video analytics. These days you no longer need a robust server and top-notch infrastructure to examine videos. MotionMap is an application designed to help you identify the zones that get the most motion from both machines and people in any video you capture with your surveillance camera or CCTV. Very simplistic, yet appropriate interface The setup is quite fast, as it entails decompressing the archive, and you can start mapping the videos as soon as possible. The application comes with a clean and minimalistic interface that only includes a few features, namely add file or folder and save all maps. As you probably hinted, if you add a folder, the app proceeds to analyze all clips inside and presents the results in a list form. Once it starts analyzing a video, you can view the mapping progressively appearing over the video along with the frames analyzed in the status bar. Uses color codes to separate low from highly used areas The highlight of the application is that it enables you to determine the regions that are most circulated in a room or space. To be more precise, the application uses color codes – blue to red – to highlight and differentiate between the areas that are highly circulated and those that present no interest whatsoever. On the downside, you should know that you cannot cut videos and thoroughly analyze only sections of the video that you require. In addition, the application does not support a lot of file formats and works with JPG, JPEG, PNG and BMP. Lastly, if you opt to save as bulk, then the application automatically saves the processed footage with the last file format selected. A basic app that can give you an idea about points of interest While it does appear rough around the edges, MotionMap can come in handy when you are trying to figure out general areas of interest, so you can redesign a store or supermarket in a way that would promote sales.
