The year is 2026. The people of the world live in a technology-infested, dystopic future, and some of them are OK with it. Kurabi has just been chosen as a candidate to become a "Human Revival Unit", a.k.a. "HRU", and will travel the world for her job. But when a mysterious hacker group starts a social media revolution and the HRUs are targeted, the newly-minted Kurabi teams up with a group of misfit girls to search for the source of the hack. Artist's rendering of a Glitterdale clan guide / photograph by Matthew Ginery for Snafu Comics Taylor Miles is a writer from Los Angeles with an affinity for battles fought on desktop computers, but he contributes the occasional comic for fun. He has found with Snafu Comics that these early comics do have a strong storytelling story arc that follows a beginning, middle and end that persevere through even the biggest conflicts. This keeps the plot points to the forefront rather than being diluted by miscellaneous fighting and sex. Taylor gave us some of his work, including a new Warlord character you may know all too well. Snafu Comics is a cartoonist website featuring comics art, commentary, and occasionally a video game and strategy game battle for your viewing pleasure. Please enjoy the music in the podcast. Time is fleeting. Death will take us, but before that, the hours and days will flee. Rannar is going to die. Or maybe he hasn't yet. The time slips by as Rannar, Brynn and the others try to extract the scenario from the Daemonic labyrinth. Soon, the clock stops at the appointed hour. Brynn must decide whether to let Rannar go, and if he chooses, it will have to be at his hands alone. Is this, indeed, what he chose? Time is fleeting. A magical door opened in my childhood, revealing an alternative universe. Many lives were changed on the other side. Worlds were destroyed and then arose like giants, a new life born anew as the time was transferred. My life was altered yet again. I awoke a day later and found that time itself had changed to suit my needs. No more dreams to haunt my long sleepless nights. I am happy, content to live without the guilt and desire to see that my purpose was to affect others.
