But I am getting the following error [ERROR] : (15) Attribute description has invalid characters, is not valid UTF-8 Why this error is coming and how can I fix this A: It appears that the file is actually in UTF-16 encoding. If we decode it with GZipDecode: We can see that it starts with 0xEF, 0xBB, 0xBF instead of the U+FEFF, U+FBBF, U+FBBF as reported by your example. This is most probably the cause of the error "Attribute description has invalid characters, is not valid UTF-8" that you get. However, it still makes no sense to have 0xEF, 0xBB, 0xBF at the beginning of the file. To prove this, we can instead use the unicode2tsvext utility (example: | unicode2tsvext input 1cdb36666d

I've been doing data analysis at the Student Success Center and have just completed my masters in higher education. One of the things we've learned about universities is that there's a big difference between universities' reputations and their student outcomes. Universities are generally more prestigious the more activities they are associated with, such as research, awards, and leadership. Universities are also associated with quality because students rank quality as highly as academic reputation. So more universities and colleges are willing to pay a premium for students who have "great activities" and academic "reputation," and those "great activities" happen to be the results of great university feeder schools. If we assume that the "great activities" are the ones that are associated with quality, then we have the part about prestige and quality with students on one side of the graph and college feeder school activities on the other. If a student wants a great reputation, but has to settle for a good college feeder school, then their activity will fall far short of an elite college's. If a student wants the activities of an elite college, but has to settle for a good college feeder school, then they will have to work hard just to get average results. With student choice, the sorting action between feeder school and university is still going on. Instead of paying a premium for top colleges, students are still choosing to go to feeder schools that fit their academic and athletic abilities and help them to get great college activities. As we know from our research, the difference between going to a top college or a top feeder school isn't the difference between going to a university and not going at all. The real difference is a lag, and that lag is primarily academic-based. So these feeder schools and universities are still having a sorting process based on academic ability. They are sorting the students according to
